Dear Marsh, Monster Detective,

Detective Marsh, I need your help right now! I am under my bed in the pitch black with only Snicker's glowing ears for light. This weekend it was supposed to be the Annual Monster's Dance Off. I have been practising my highland fling dance for ages and I can't let this ruin it. The competition was about to start and I was getting ready in the dressing room. Suddenly Snicker started acting strangely, scratching at the door with his big Great Dane claws and whining loudly. When I stepped outside I expected everyone to be cheering and laughing with colourful lights shining everywhere. But everyone had disappeared. All I could hear was the howl of the wind and the rustling of the trees. The banners were torn down and the fairground rides were running, but no one was on them. Sticks of half-eaten monsterling's candy floss and pieces of popcorn were scattered across the floor. I could feel my heart racing and my legs shaking.

I tore across to the hotel with snicker barking madly by my legs. As I was sprinting down the corridor I stopped suddenly. I saw a glimpse of a ghost. Luckily it didn't see me as it floated through the wall. I had thought every one was gone... but I guess I was wrong. I followed the ghost, pushing the creaky, old door open to the next room... and what I saw was shocking! In the ghost's hands was a clear bottle and inside there were little figures that looked like all the guests of the hotel! The ghost shook the bottle and laughed wickedly. I was about to scream when snicker jumped up and her rough cold paw covered my mouth.

Quietly I crept back to my room and slid under my bed. And here I am now. I am writing to you because you are the best detective I know and I need your help. I am terrified that I might get taken too. Please come immediately
